It is our regular practice to publish the Libri Best Student Paper Award winning paper in the third or fourth issue of each volume. This year the decision process took longer than in preceding years. Unfortunately our slower timetable did not allow the 2008 winner adequate time, after notification, to prepare her article for publication in this year's volume. As a result, the winning paper will appear in the first issue of the 2009 volume.

We're pleased to announce this year's winner is Michelle Caswell for her paper, "Irreparable damage: violence, ownership and voice in an Indian Archive." Ms. Caswell was a Master's student at the University of Wisconsin– Milwaukee, School of Information Studies. The paper was prepared spring semester 2008 as part of the Seminar on Modern Archival Administration. It is a very interesting paper that we know will attract many of our readers.

Next year will be the 14th year of the Student Award. The number and quality of submissions each year has proven to us the enduring value of the idea first put forward by former Libri Editor Dr. Irene Wormell. We look forward to reading next year's entrants. The announcement for the 2009 contest appears at the end of this issue.
